Commander's Report...

Soon after the Christmas season every year, I start making my plans for the coming boating season. It usually starts with a bit of daydreaming to help ward off the winter blues and then, before I know it, I'm making lists.

One list is for enhancement and repairs that I want to do on our boat. Some things, of course, were never crossed off last year's list. This year, maybe I'll replace the main halyard. I definitely need to replace a corroded gas fitting and update my flares inventory. The main sail needs a good cleaning, and I've never been too happy with our anchor stowage. You get the idea...

As for destinations, we plan on sailing to at least one area that we have never been to before, as well as re-visit areas that we haven't been to in awhile. I have started a list of charts that I need to update and I've pulled out some books that will help with our planning. We always like to get into a bit of the history of the places that we visit.

One of the many benefits of being involved in CPS is that there are always boaters around that I can talk to about any of my plans ... boaters who have "been there, done that". As we plan our boating season, it is easy to take for granted all the good stuff that we have learned, or re-learned, in CPS courses. And a lot of that learning has happened outside the formal curriculums. For example, I have never taught a course, or taken a course, in which I haven't learned something worthwhile from the students.

If you need some help with your boating plans or just want to bounce around a few ideas, we have Squadron members who are experienced in all sorts of boating in run-abouts to big power cruisers ... from blue water sailing, to dinghy sailing, to wilderness canoeing. And, that reminds me of another list that I have to update ...

Come and talk to us at our booth on the White Rock pier for the TD Canada Trust Regatta on April 27 and 28.

Harald Hanssen, AP
Commander,

Boating Class Survey

For marketing purposes we survey the new classes each term to see how effective our advertising dollar is spent and where to put the emphasis in the future.

Well this year the results showed that:

|                                                            |     |
|------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Word-of-mouth ranked first bringing new students to class. | 25% |
| Advertising in the Peace Arch News was second              | 24% |
| Our new road signs were third                              | 20% |
| The remainder is composed of:                              |     |
| Radio                                                      | 1%  |
| Pacific Yachting                                           | 4%  |
| Marina/supply store                                        | 4%  |
| Web site                                                   | 8%  |
| Referral from previous students                            | 11% |
| Co-op/Regatta                                              | 3%  |

This means Squadron, that YOU, our members, have helped immensely in attracting new students, so thank you and please keep the word out there...continue to encourage people to attend and let us continue in our efforts to make this a safe boating community.

Thanks again!

TD Canada Trust Semiahmoo Bay Regatta

Our Squadron will be on the White Rock pier for both days of the TD Canada Trust Semiahmoo Bay Regatta on April 27 and 28. This is the 3rd year of this charity event and our Squadron has lent its support each year.

The Regatta, formerly called the Semiahmoo Bay International Regatta, is hosted by our neighbours, the International Yacht Club of BC for the benefit of the White Rock South Surrey Foundation. Last year, almost $10,000 was raised for local charities.

The last weekend in April has now been established as an important weekend in racing in our waters. Many sailboats of all types and from far-off places will be organized into Racing and Cruising classes and into a number of mono-hull and multi-hull divisions. The TD Canada Trust Cup will be awarded at the Saturday evening dinner and dance in White Rock. The White Rock Cup will be awarded on Sunday afternoon at a BBQ lunch at the Blaine Harbor Boating Center. For more information on participating in the Regatta, check out their web site at www.interyachtclub.com.

Come out and watch the races, and visit us at our booth to learn more about what White Rock Power and Sail Squadron is planning to offer in courses and other safe boating activities in the near future.

Commander

Did you know what the ancient Viking boat sails were made of ?

You may have seen pictures of the distinctive square-sailed vessels the ancient Vikings sailed across the North Sea and out into the Atlantic Ocean. It was with those sails that Vikings made long journeys as far as North America and the eastern Mediterranean Sea.

The Vikings' homeland was not well supplied with plant crops that could supply fibers to weave into sails, but there were plenty of furry animals in that northern climate. Instead of plant fibers, they used wool. The long, strong outer hairs of the sheep were twisted into thin strands for the warp of the wool twill sailcloth, while the perpendicular weft was made of the soft inner hairs. To make the sails water-resistant, the Vikings added tar and fat to the cloth. Their simple square-rigged sails carried them farther than any previous European ocean explorers.

At the bitter end

To guard against accidental loss of the anchor, the bitter (inboard) end of the anchor rode should be made fast to some part of the boat. You may do this by leading the line below, perhaps through a deck pipe, and securing it to a strong point with an eye bolt or similar fastener. On small boats where the entire length of rode is carried on deck, you can have an eye splice in the bitter end to fit a securely fastened ring or eyebolt. In any case, make sure the bitter end is fastened, but always have handy a means of cutting the anchor line in an emergency - even if you think you could unfasten it quickly.

How many, how heavy?

The number of anchors you should carry depends upon several things - the size of your boat, whether it is used only in familiar sheltered waters or cruises to many harbours and, to some extent, the type of anchor. Some small boats have only a single anchor, but this cannot be considered adequate. Even discounting the possibility of fouling one anchor so badly that it cannot be retrieved, there are occasions when it is desirable to lie to two. Consider the possibility that one anchor heavy enough for extreme conditions could be a nuisance in ordinary weather.
